A recent article in the Chicago Tribune indicates that to improve the 75th street corridor in Chicago, the most congested spot in the city's rail network "two flyovers and a grade separation, along with a series of other improvements. Overall price tag: $1 billion" would be needed.

If this project would cost $1 billion dollars, how can the entire Great Lakes Project be just $2.8 billion dollars. The GLBT numbers are as usual not accurate and for this reason their proposal must be denied. Public necessity includes ability to pay for a project and GLBT has not accurately estimated the cost of this project nor have they shown any ability to pay for the project.
