The Great Lakes Basin project has no public financial benefit. Instead, it will cost the public money. I stand to lose income as my farm will be cut in half and land will be lost. This incidentally reduces the food available for the nation to eat. My tenant will see higher fuel costs due to the split fields, the traveling between split fields, and the idle time waiting for the trains to pass. The government, which is the public, will see reduce property tax income and this will result is less money for rural Illinois schools. Schools also face increase fuel costs and risk as the buses must pass over these dangerous high-speed rail lines. In turn the schools will raise taxes costing the public more money. There is no positive public financial benefit from this line, it will just cost the public their hard earned money, and line the pockets of the too embarrassed to publish their names GLBT investors.
