Re: Tongue River Rail Project – Land Access Request

Dear [Property Owner Name(s)]:

As I promised in my letter to you on February 6, 2013, I am following up to provide you with more details on the environmental survey work that my office (the Surface Transportation Board's Office of Environmental Analysis or OEA) may ask your permission to conduct on your property.

To provide you with some background, OEA is currently working with our independent third-party environmental consultant, ICF International (ICF) to identify and assess potential environmental consequences of Tongue River Railroad's proposal to construct and operate a rail line to transport coal from the Ashland area of Montana. This review is required of agencies under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA). NEPA ensures that agencies take a hard look at the potential environmental effects of a proposal before making a decision on that proposal. As you know, we are preparing a full Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for Tongue River Railroad's proposed rail line construction and operation.

As part of our environmental review under NEPA, we must gather environmental information and data that will allow us to compare the potential environmental effects of possible rail alignments and the "no action" alternative. Some of this information may be obtained from available federal and state maps, databases, and literature. However, the best method for OEA to gather and analyze environmental data is to conduct on-the-ground environmental surveys. This allows OEA to provide the Board with the best information possible for the Board to make its decision on whether or not to approve the project. This information should also help stakeholders, including agencies, Tribes, land owners, environmental organizations, and the members of the public, review and comment on the EIS.

As I mentioned in my February 6, 2013 letter to you, my staff and I, as well as our environmental consultants at ICF, realize that entering your land is a privilege. If we are fortunate enough to receive access from you, we would respect your rights as a landowner at all times. We would consider any special conditions that you wish to impose concerning access to your property. If you wish, you, your representative, and anyone else you would like to include, may accompany field crews and observe survey activities.

Timing of Environmental Surveys

Environmental surveys would generally be conducted from late March to the middle of October. Typical timeframes for each set of surveys are detailed below. The timeframes provide a range of months in which different fieldwork surveys, typically lasting only a few days, would likely take place. Variables such as weather conditions, data availability, and modeling may change the timeframes. If granted access to your land, we will coordinate directly with you in the event of such a change. Some survey activities are time-sensitive and need to be conducted at specific times of the year. Other surveys are not time-sensitive and can be conducted any time of the year. For these reasons, environmental resource specialists may need access to your property on multiple occasions. If you allow access to your property for environmental surveys, OEA will work directly with you to determine the best time to conduct surveys. OEA appreciates any access you can provide even if it does not cover the full timeframe when surveys could be conducted.

Environmental Survey Details

Our survey teams consist of biologists, hydrologist, archaeologists, historians, noise specialists, and other environmental resource specialists. Tongue River Railroad is not and will not be involved in our environmental survey work. If you allow us to access your property, our work would consist primarily of observation with the possibility of minor ground disturbance (such as a small soil probe). Small analytical equipment (such as noise monitors roughly the size of a shoe box) may need to be set up for short periods of time. No materials would be removed from your property, and fenced properties would remain secure during and after the survey. No attempt would be made to access property during muddy conditions to minimize damage to roads and property. Disturbance to livestock would be minimized by driving slowly in and around livestock and by strictly adhering to all speed limits through properties.

A site survey on the property may include a number of activities, which are described below. We may not need to conduct all of the surveys on your property—for example, if suitable habitat for a specific species that we must survey is not present. If you grant access to your property, we will provide you with advanced notification of the surveys that we would like to conduct on your property. We would provide you with additional details regarding how specific surveys would be conducted, such as the time of day the survey would take place, the number of field staff required to conduct the survey, and the duration of the survey. And we would, of course, comply with your specific instructions and conditions of access.

Survey Details for Natural Resources (Vegetation, Habitat, Wildlife, Hydrology, Surface Water, and Wetland Resources) –

- Documentation of vegetation, habitat, topography, wetlands, streams, and wildlife. This may involve taking notes, filling out data forms, taking Global Positioning System (GPS) points, and taking pictures. Some minor trimming of riparian vegetation (vegetation located in the bank area of a watercourse) may be needed along streams to measure the Ordinary High Water Mark or top of the stream bank. No removal of vegetation, removal of crops, or other damage would occur on the property.

- Small hand-held shovel probes may be taken to assess soil conditions as part of the wetland documentation. Typical soil probes would be approximately 12-16 inches deep and up to 12-inches wide. All soils would be placed back into the hole, tamped down, and returned to original condition. Environmental resource specialists often work in open range and pastures areas where livestock are present and understand the importance of never leaving a hole unattended and ensuring it is completely filled upon vacating the area.
- Environmental resource specialists may be floating the Tongue River and collecting data (e.g., stream width, stream depth, substrate, bank conditions, and riparian vegetation), taking GPS points, and taking pictures. To conduct this activity, existing roads/trails would be used to access the Tongue River to launch or take-out a raft.
- The approximate window for these fieldwork activities would be from end of March through the beginning of September. During this time several site visits may be made, typically spanning anywhere from one to several days.

Survey Details for Paleontological, Archeological, Cultural and Historic Properties Resources –

- Archaeologists, possibly accompanied by Native American representatives, may conduct ground surveys. This would include 2-6 archaeological surveyors walking transects spaced 5-10 meters apart, observing the ground surface for any indications of archaeological resources or cultural material including prehistoric artifacts or evidence of historical trash or other resources. This may involve note taking, photography, taking GPS points, minimal use of a hand-held trowel to probe the top soil, and measurement of surface deposits.
- Historians and architectural historians would identify buildings and structures that generally are over 50 years of age. This may involve taking notes, filling out data forms, taking GPS points, and taking photographs.
- The approximate window for these fieldwork activities would be from end of April through the middle of October. During this time several site visits may be made, typically spanning anywhere from one to several days.

Survey Details for Noise and Vibration –

- A small, battery powered noise monitor (the size of a shoebox) may be positioned at a representative location on the property to automatically collect ambient noise level data. This data would be used to characterize existing acoustic conditions. During the noise monitoring time period, a technician would briefly visit the site to observe and document ambient noise sources.
- The approximate window for these fieldwork activities would be from the beginning of April through the end of August. During this time several site visits may be made, typically spanning anywhere from one to several days.

In some instances, the preliminary environmental survey analysis (in-office analysis) may indicate that certain surveys are not necessary on your land. In addition, and depending on the preliminary environmental survey analysis, only select environmental surveys listed above may need to be conducted on your property. It should also be noted that access to your land may only be necessary to access another landowner's parcel where environmental surveys may be needed. This would require the environmental resource specialist to drive or walk across your property without conducting any environmental surveys on your property.

Land Access Permission

If we are fortunate enough to receive your permission to conduct environmental surveys, we will respect your rights as a landowner and will abide by any conditions you wish to include. We welcome you, your representative, and anyone else you would like to include, to accompany field crews and to observe any survey activities.

OEA is happy to discuss any concerns you may have regarding the timing, methods, and personnel for environmental surveys. We recognize that environmental surveys may have the potential to interfere with the operations of working properties and are committed to working with individual landowners to accommodate requests to protect your property during surveys. We invite you to call if you have any concerns or questions and would be happy to work with you to address each of your concerns individually.

Please complete, sign, and return the enclosed access permission form stating whether you agree to allow OEA to access your property to perform environmental surveys or if you do not wish OEA to access your property. If you do not return the access permission form below, we will follow up with a phone call before assuming that we do not have access to your land. The enclosed access permission form also includes space to include any specific concerns, instructions, or conditions that you would like to include as part of the land access agreement. You can call or email at any time with any additional restrictions, conditions, or questions. OEA kindly requests your response as soon as possible because certain surveys need to commence in late March. Please use the self-addressed stamped envelope provided to return your access permission form. If you have any questions about this letter, the surveys being conducted, or the access permission, please contact Chris Moelter at 503-525-6145.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
